性別觀點回應不確定時代的安全挑戰

Why Gender Matters in Addressing Safety Challenges in an Uncertain Era

近年來，東亞地區地緣政治波動與數位科技轉型日益顯著，為區域安全治理帶來複雜且多變的挑戰。從性別觀點出發，這些變動如何影響個人、社會與區域安全，又該如何提出具韌性的回應策略？講者將結合在和平建構的觀察及經驗，探討女性參與如何從實務與政策層面落實「積極和平」。

Geopolitical volatility and rapid digital and artificial intelligence transformation have intensified the complexity of safety governance across East Asia. From a gender perspective, how do these changes shape experiences of unsafety at the individual, societal, and regional levels, and what constitutes a resilient response? Drawing on observations and experience in peacebuilding, the keynote explores how women's participation can advance Positive Peace through both practical engagement and policy-oriented approaches.

Wang Chao-Ching is a practitioner deeply involved in Taiwan's social policy, currently serving as the CEO of the Peng Wan-Ru Foundation. He holds a Master's degree in Sociology from National Taiwan University and a Ph.D. in Social Welfare from National Chung Cheng University. His research focuses on comparative social policy, gender politics, and childcare policy.

In his practical work, Wang advocates for the core concept of "socialization of care," aiming to break the dilemma where individual families bear the full burden of caregiving. Under his leadership, the Peng Wan-Ru Foundation has long promoted non-profit preschools, childcare services, and home caregiver systems. He strives to establish an affordable, high-quality public or non-profit service system that balances market dynamics and government intervention.

Wang frequently contributes to media outlets and participates in public hearings, providing incisive analyses of Taiwan's declining birthrate. He emphasizes that addressing the population crisis requires more than just subsidies; it necessitates fundamental reforms in gender equality and workplace culture.
